Four Men are Killed and Many Others

ber of the Blues in 1879, he had watched with interest the career of the Grays and he felt that the State itself was proud of that organization. He had seen the Company make its fine record under the elder Bossieux, Spence, the younger Bossieux and the others, and had watched its progress with interest and pride. He said that for volunteers to rise in public esteem they must stand together, and that they could not stand together without enthuslasm and interest. The old Grays' uniforms always excited the enthusiam and applause of the people, and with the commingling of the Blue and the Gray the consummation of pa-triotism was achieved at this day. When he first became a member of the Blues, the Grays held the position which seemed to be the ideal of volunteer sol-diery, and wore the uniform that was n pride to the South, and which evoked cheers from one end of the city to the MILITARY SPIRIT LOW. But the present Grays did not seem to be like the Grays of old; not what they used to be. The military spirit was not as much aboard as it used to be. That old spirit should be invoked and carried higher than ever. In order to do this, the men must attend drills and meetings and talk up the military.

The Grays has now a captain who is chip of the old block, and who will revive interest in the military, and if the men follow him, they will put the Grays upon a plane of high public opinion. The men should go forward now, determined to do all in their power to make the company the very pride of Virginia. When they realize the glory in such a work, they will not hesitate to do it.

Lieutenant E. C. Garrison, president of the Grays' Association, made a few re-marks. He served in the company for twenty-one years and was proud of it. He said that he thought the present com pany was composed of as good material as it ever was, and he was always glad to mingle with the boys, whether at a banquet table or at the armory.

Adjutant Gray Bossleux was called upon to lead in a song, but as he had no voice for singing he called upon Sergeant Poindexter to help him out, which he did with a hearty good will, assisted by the entire company, and that good old refrain, "Auld Lang Syne," rang out over the York River.

At the conclusion of the speech-making, Major Cutchins, on behalf of Captain Dickerson, presented handsome gold badges for % per cent, in attendance upon drills and parades to the following: upon drills and parades to the following:

It said in part:
"When I was eighteen years old, I began to get ready for Richmond College. I taught a small school a few months to make a little money to help to pay my way. But that was a slow method of improving my financial condition, for the pupils were few in number and the amount pald for each was small. I wrote to Dr. Robert Ryland, who at that time was president of the college, making inquiries about the cost college, making inquiries about the cost of spending a session in Richmond, and asking his advice on certain points. replied that he would see me soon, as he had a series of appointments in Louisa, and he would then call at my father's and talk matters over with me. Sure enough, he drove up in his gig to Louise Courthouse, and preached at the Bap-tist Church. In the afternoon he drove to my home, soven miles distant, and His coming spent the night with us. was a great event in the history of our family, for seldom had we entertained a man so well known in the denomina tion. He made himself very pleasant, talking on different subjects to every memoer of the family. At first we were very shy; but we soon got over that, and enjoyed thoroughly the instructive con-versation of this interesting man. It was the most memorable visit ever paid to my early home, except, possibly, one paid by Luther Rice. On going to our rooms for the night, Dr. Ryland asked me what time my school opened in the morning. I told him we usually began work as soon as possible after breakfast, and as soon as possible after breakfast, and he expressed his pleasure at that, as he wanted to go with me to my school and see something of my way of teach-ing before he was obliged to go on to his next appointment. The prospect of such an auditor alarmed me no little:

spent a night filled with dread and almost Referring to the appearance of the College in those days, Dr. Dickinson said. "Late in the afternoon we drove up to the College. There were several stu-dents on the stage with me. I walked out that afternoon to see Richmond, and how big it did seem to me, who had never seen a town larger than Goldons-ville, and to whom Trevillan's Depot and ville, and to whom Trevilian's Depot and Louisa Courthouse, had been wonderfully Important and interesting places. At that time the College was out in the country, for the town had not been built out in this direction. The only College building of any consequence was the one now occupied by Professor Mitchell. In this the president and his family lived, and in it were the dlining-room, lecture-room, the chapel, and Dr. Ryland's study. I soon felt very much at home. A finer set of young men than my classmates I have never seen. Very few of mates I have never seen. Very few of them are left now.

"The years have been many and busy and troubled since we stood as young men where these youths stand to-night. It is almost impossible to remove the impression that we are growing old. How-ever, any temporary depression which this reflection might produce is at once dismissed by the fact that there are others yet with us to whom we of the class of 1852 are mere lads; for while we class of 1852 are mere lads; for while we were still in our 'salad days,' green and raw, our venerable brethren and fathers. Dr. P. S. Henson and Mr. Josiah Ryland, had already spent years at college, had gotten their degrees, and were fully launched on the troubled sea of active life. Let us rejoice that we still have these patriarchs with us. May they remain with us for many a day and year!"

to come. These teachers did falthful work on very meagre salaries. The first three teachers got $900, $600, and $300 per annum, respectively. In 1851 the movement led by the great A. M. Poindexter began, and afterwards salaries were limproved; but up to this date our professors have never been paid adequately for

Physics: W. D. Cox, Amherst county; R. A. McFarland, North Carolina. Trustees' Meeting. The trustees of the College held an all-day session yesterday. The day was taken up mainly with routine business, though it was decided, as was expected, to have two academies next session as feeders to the College.

The Newport News school will be directly controlled by a local board and will have as its head.

be directly controlled by a local board and will have as its head Professor E. S. Ligon, a former graduate of the college, who has been engaged in educational work in Georgia.

The academy to be started here will be located at first in a house on Lombardy Street, owned by the college.

During the summer vacation the place will be gotten in shape for the reception of students. Later on, it is thought, that larger quarters will be secured and in time, an academy building will probably be erected. The school will be in charge of a committee of five, one of the members of which is to be the president of the college.

Quite a mass of routine business was transacted by the Board. A number of minor changes will be made here and there and several small appropriations were made for different purposes.

In the account printed yesterday of the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Richmond College it was stated that Mr. Robert S. Bosher had been elected auditor in place of Mr. T. H. Eltees of Richmond College it was stated that Mr. Robert S. Bosher had been elected auditor in place of Mr. T. H. El-lett. The language was such as to permit of a wrong construction. The fact is that Mr. Ellett declined re-election to the position, which he had so ably filled dur-Ing the previous year.

The exercises, and with them, the season closed with the address to the graduating class by President Boatwight, and the announcements from the trus-tees by their president, Dr. Hatcher. Secondary Education,

The conference concerning secondary education, held at the college yesterday at 11 o'clock, proved interesting to those who attended. But fifteen institutions outide of Richmond were represented. Dr. J. A. C. Chandler presided and addresses were delivered by Mr. Frank P. Brent, Dr. Ramsey, Professor H. S. Bird, of William and Mary; Professor A.

Bird, of William and Mary; Professor A. C. Wightman, Dr. Buttrick, Dr. Robert Frayser and others. The conference resulted in no action and was not intended to do so. It was designed to be merely a talk over the chool situation.
